REFLECTIONS ON NATIONAL AGRICULTURE DAY

REFLECTIONS ON NATIONAL AGRICULTURE DAY Tuesday, March 22nd, was a day of recognition for one of the most important industries in America – the agriculture industry. Na-tional Agriculture Day is a time to reflect on the contributions of the meñ and women – farmers, businessmen, scientists, chemists, and laborers – who make their living feeding not only this country, but most of the world as well. Agriculture's contribution to the U.S. economy can not be un-derestimated. Its far and away the biggest industry in America. How big? In Kentucky, we have a history that is rooted in our agricultural heritage. It was the burley tobacco grown in Kentucky that provided early settlers with the currency our fledgling commonwealth needed to survive. Today, the agriculture industry continues to commare the Kentucky concomment. The Kentucky concomment, the Kentucky concomment, and lowa have more farms than the 99,000 focated in Kentucky. # Restoration program sees 919 turkeys put in state forest land

Kentucky forest land received 919 wild turkeys this winter, a record breaking season for the wild turkey restoration program administered by the Department of Fish and Wildlife Resources.

Fifty-seven sites were stocked in 51 counties, bringing the total to 112 counties across the Commonwealth that now have wild turkeys. Six of the remaining counties have relatively poor habitat and are scheduled to be stocked next year if suitable sites can be found. Fayette and Bourbon coun-ties are less than four percent forested and are considered not to have any turkey habitat. According to George Wright, tur-key program coordinator, several factors were involved in this year's successful restoration effort. The most important was that other states worked hard to meet long-standing obligations to Kentucký for wild turkeys. "Our involvement in wildlife exchanges with other states really paid off well this year," said Wright, re-ferring to the department's recent practice of trading river otters for

acquired from out-of-state sources, while the remaining 179 were live-trapped and relocated by department personnel. The in-state effort was also a record for a single wild turkey Wright.

"In a normal year, we relocate about 250 birds, and we released almost four times that many this season. Since reproduction takes season. Since reproduction takes place three years after release, we calculate a gain of six or seven years over what would occur from an aver-age season, "said the biologist. "We'll probably never have another restoration season like this one,

Poaching is the most detrimental factor to the establishment of huntable game populations. I expect we'll receive the remaining 140 or so birds next spring," Wright

After the remaining contracts are filled, Wright plans to negotiate for more out-of-state sources to continue the wild turkey restoration. Areas with suitable habitat to support larger flocks will be targeted for additional turkeys.

we wanted to be as tair as pos-sible with the initial statewide distri-bution of wild turkeys," said Wright, "and after we've released birds in the last six counties, we'll return to areas with several hundred miles of turkey habitat."

Turkey season in Kentucky is just a few weeks away, and should prove to be another record harvest season. The number of turkey hunters in Kentucky woods on opening day April 20 will be over 5,000, and according to Wright that figure is growing about 25 percent each year.
